When his children were young, Mike Mann unplugged the family TV and began telling stories to his family. Going unplugged did more than give him quality time with his kids - it led Mike into a career as a professional storyteller. He now tells stories to over 15,000 children annually.

Winner of several national awards including the Parents' Choice Award, Mike is also a training consultant with the National Institute on Media and the Family and a presenter at the International Child and Adolescent Conference.
